

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Hence it is that no historian of the present day can afford to neglect the science of epigraphy. This is true for any period from the late republic down to the fourth century of the empire, but it is especially true for the period of the Flavian emperors. Students of Roman history have suffered an irreparable loss from the fact that the Histories of Tacitus have survived only in a fragmentary form, breaking off just after the accession of Vespasian. Through this misfortune we are confined almost solely to the meagre outlines of Suetonius and Dio Cassius for the facts of the reigns of Vespasian and Titus.

Under these circumstances the knowledge gained from the inscriptions of this period becomes invaluable. In this investigation, it is the aim to gather this material, to arrange it in convenient order for historical study, and to append such comments and cross references as may be of value in this connection. As far as I know, nothing of this nature has previously been undertaken. No striking results are expected ; but if something can be added to the facts gained from the histories, in the nature of not unimportant details and greater accuracy in dates, the work will, it is hoped, be found to be not without its justification.

No attempt has been made to differentiate absolutely the reigns of Vespasian and Titus,—that is, there has been no sharp division of the work on this point. Such a division would be practically impossible, and would certainly be entirely unnecessary. Titus was made joint emperor, with powers almost equal to those of his father, early in the latter's reign, while his own reign after the death of Vespasian was so short that there is no real break discernible. Hence it has been deemed better to make the necessary distinctions under each of the separate divisions of the work.

Such a task as this has been rendered possible by the publication of the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, which has formed the basis of the work. Other collections, in particular those of Orelli-Henzen, Wilmanns, Dessau, and the collections of Greek inscriptions, have been employed. While it has been the aim to acknowledge a debt wherever this was clearly marked, a general indebtedness is here acknowledged to the notes of these collections, as well as to the various epigraphical, historical, and institutional works.

The attempt has been made to make the collection of inscriptions as complete as possible, but there are undoubtedly some omissions.

The writer wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to Professor Fred B. R. Hellems, of the University of Colorado, at whose suggestion this work was undertaken, and to Assistant Professor Charles L. Durham, of Cornell University, for reading of both manuscript and proof, and for valuable criticisms and suggestions.

AN INSCRIPTION OF VESPASIAN BEFORE HIS PRINCIPATE.

To what is known of the life of Vespasian previous to his elevation to the principate, the evidence of the inscriptions can add but little. There is, however, one interesting and valuable inscription that bears upon this period of his life.

I. Hi termini XIX positi sunt | ab Scriboniano et Pisone
Frugi | ex depalatione T. Flavi Vespasiani | arbitri.

(C. I. L. VI, 1268.)

The date of this inscription is not determined. It is before Vespasian became emperor, but, judging from the prominence of the men by whom he was chosen umpire, probably after he had won some distinction.

Piso Frugi, or L. Calpurnius Piso Frugi Licinianus¹, was the adopted son and destined successor of Galba, but enjoyed for only four days the distinction of being head of the empire, when he was slain in the insurrection of Otho. Scribonianus, or Licinius Crassus Scribonianus², was a prominent senator who was offered the empire by Antonius Primus, but refused it. It is a curious coincidence that each of the three men mentioned in this inscription afterwards became, or had an opportunity to become, emperor.

As far as I know, this inscription is the only direct record of the praenomen of Vespasian.

LEX DE IMPERIO VESPASIANI.

The most important epigraphical evidence that we have for the reign of Vespasian is the fragment of what is known as the “Lex de Imperio Vespasiani.” It is the only extant example of the legislative act by which the princeps was constitutionally invested with the various powers of the principate.

On account of the fact that the document has been fully treated by various writers, the notes here have been confined to the more general points. For a complete discussion, see Mommsen, Staatsr. II, p. 876 ff.; Cantarelli, Bull. Com. 1890, p. 194 ff.; 235 ff.; Pelham, Jour. of Phil. XVII, pp. 27–52; Mispoulet, Les Institutions Politiques des Romains, I, pp. 367–379.

A transcription of the extant portion of the “Lex” is here given.

2. ---- foedusve cum quibus volet facere liceat, ita uti licuit divo Aug., | Ti. Iulio Caesari Aug., Tiberioque Claudio Caesari Aug. Germanico;

utique ei senatum habere, relationem facere, remittere, senatus | consulta per relationem discessionemque facere liceat, | ita uti licuit divo Aug., Ti. Iulio Caesari Aug., Ti. Claudio Caesari Augusto Germanico; of the pomerium ever found on the right bank of the Tiber within the limits of the fourteenth region.

These two inscriptions date between March 1st and July 1st, 75, since Vespasian was designated for his seventh consulship in March,¹ and entered upon his seventh tribunician power on July 1st.² The date 74, given by the editors of the *Corpus*³ for the first of these inscriptions is incorrect.

The right to extend the ideal boundary of the city of Rome, known as the pomerium, was considered in ancient times to belong only to those who had extended the boundaries of the Roman state. The evidence of later writers seems to point to a continuance of the same rule. Cf. Tac. Ann. XII, 23: iis qui protulere imperium etiam terminos urbis propagare datur; Gellius, XIII, 14, 3: habebat autem ius proferendi pomerii qui populum Romanum agro de hostibus capto auxerat; Vita Aureliani, 21, 10: pomerio autem neminem principum licet addere nisi eum qui agri barbarici aliqua parte Romanam rem publicam locupletaverit.

In any case, it would be easy to find means of applying the rule to any emperor. Vespasian might readily have used the reduction of Judaea to a province, or the extension of the Roman arms in Britain under his legates, as an excuse for thus extending the pomerium, if such an excuse were necessary. This would account for the expression auctis populi Romani finibus, which by this time, however, may well have become a mere form. The fact that Vespasian is expressly empowered, in the fifth clause of ¹ Vespasian was designated consul for the second time in December, 69, for the third time in November, 70, and for his six succeeding consulates in the month of March. Cf. Chambalu, De Magistratibus Flaviorum, p. 17.

² Vespasian reckons his tribunician power from the Kalends of July, 69, when the Alexandrine army proclaimed him emperor (Suet. Vesp. 6), although it was not formally conferred until the passage by the senate of the "Lex de Imperio" in January, 70,—a significant fact in the development of the principate. For a table of the magistracies of Vespasian and Titus in convenient form, see Cagnat, *Cours d'Épigraphie latine*³, pp. 179, 180; Egbert, Latin Inscriptions, pp. 129, 130.

³ C. I. L. VI, 1232.

the "Lex", to extend the pomerium cum ex re publica censebit esse would seem to show that the rule had become practically a dead letter.¹

VITELLIAN WAR.

A few inscriptions referring to men prominent in the successful campaign carried on in Italy by the lieutenants of Vespasian against Vitellius can be cited.

C. LICINIUS MUCIANUS.

It seems somewhat strange that we have very little inscriptional evidence for Mucianus, who bore so important a part in the incipient principate of Vespasian.² His name appears in the Acta Arvalium and in a fragment of the Tabula Feriarum Latinarum as consul for the third time in 72,³ on several lead water pipes,⁴ and in the following Greek inscription from Oenoanda in Lycia.⁵

5. [Γαί]ον Λικίνιον Μουκι|[αν]ὸν πρεσβευτὴν [Νέρωνος] | Κλαυδίου
Καίσαρος Σεβαστο[ῦ] | Γερμανικοῦ ἀντισστρά|τηγον | Ἑρμαῖος Σιλλέου
φύσει | δὲ Διογένοῦς τὸν ἑαυτο[ῦ] | εὐεργέτην.

(Bull. de Corres. Hellénique, 1886, p. 218.)

FLAVIUS SABINUS.

6. ----- *leg. divi Claudii pro pr. provinc. Moe|siae,*⁶
*cur. census Gallici, praef. urbi | iterum.*⁷ Huic senatus, auctore |

² For the life of Mucianus cf. Tac. H. I, 10, et passim; Dial. 37; Pliny, N. H. II, § 231, et passim; Suet. Vesp. 6, 13; etc. See Dessau, Prosopographia, II, p. 280, no. 147; L. Brunn, De C. Licinio Muciano, Lpz., 1870.

³ Nos. 152 and 169; cf. also 151.

⁴ No. 332.

⁵ The fact that Mucianus was legate of Lycia under Nero is gleaned from this inscription, thus confirming the conjecture previously made by Borghesi (Oeuv. IV, pp. 349, 350). The fact of the legateship, but not the date, was already known from Pliny (N. H. XII, § 9; XIII, § 88).

⁶ Tac. H. III, 75.

⁷ Tac. H. I, 46; II, 63; III, 75; Plut. Otho, 5.

Imp. Caes. Vespasiano fratre, | clupeum posuit vadimonis | honoris causa dilatis, fu|nus censorium¹ censuit, statuum | in foro divi Augusti ponen|dam decrevit.

Rome, in Forum Romanum.

(Dessau, 984.)

This inscription pertains to Flavius Sabinus, the elder brother of Vespasian, killed at Rome by the Vitellians at the time of the burning of the Capitol.² I have given Mommsen's supplement, which, though not in all cases certain, illustrates the nature of the original.

L. TAMPIUS FLAVIANUS.

7. ---- Tampio Flaviano | cos., procos. prov. | Africae, leg. Aug. pro pr. Panno|niarum. | Huic triumphalia ornamenta | ---- opsibus a Transdanu|bianis acceptis, limitibus omnibus exploratis, | hostibus ad vectigalia praestanda adactis | -----
L. Tampius Rufus³-----

Fundi in Latium. (C. I. L. X, 6225—supp. of Mommsen.)

Tampius Flavianus was legate of Pannonia in 69.⁴ He was old and wealthy and hesitated to take part in the contest for the principate. When the soldiers of his province declared for Vespasian, he at first fled to Italy, but afterwards returned to Pannonia and joined the party of Vespasian. He was related by marriage to Vitellius. This, with his previous reluctance, made his soldiers so suspicious that they demanded his death, but he was saved by Antonius Primus.⁵ That he was proconsul of Africa, we learn from Pliny.⁶ He was elected to the Fratres Arvales in place of Galba, Feb. 26, 69,¹ probably during his absence from Pannonia, and was curator aquarum, 73-74.² He was twice suffect consul, in years unknown, the second time, however, certainly during the reign of Vespasian, and probably about 74.³

³ Mommsen (note to C. I. L., l. c.) thinks that this L. Tampius Rufus may be the Rufus to whom Ovid addressed his epistle Ex Ponto, II, 11.

⁴ He was probably appointed to this post by Nero or Galba.

M. FABIVS FABVLLVS.

8. M. Fabius | Fabullus, | trib. militum | leg. XIII Gem., | leg. Aug. provinc. | Africae pr. pr., | leg. Aug. leg. XIII Gem., | sacr. Nym(phis).

Ager Poetovionensis in Pannonia Sup. (C. I. L. III, 4118.)

Mommsen⁴ thinks that this M. Fabius Fabullus is identical with the legate of the fifth legion under Vitellius mentioned by Tacitus⁵ and Plutarch.⁶ If this be so, the inscription must date previous to this legateship. The identification is not absolutely certain, but is exceedingly probable. The name is an uncommon one, and it is unlikely that there were two officers of the same name and like rank.

SEX. LVCILIVS BASSVS.

In two military diplomas,⁷ dating April 5, 71, the name of Sex. Lucilius Bassus occurs, in the one as prefect of the fleet at Misenum, and in the other as prefect of the fleet stationed at Ravenna. This Lucilius Bassus had been placed in command of both fleets by Vitellius. He was the first of the Vitellian leaders to go over to Vespasian, together with the fleet at Ravenna, where he then was.⁸ After this, Vitellius placed Claudius Apollinaris in command of the fleet at Misenum, but he, too, soon deserted to Vespasian.⁹ Vespasian, however, considered Bassus the true prefect of both fleets, as shown by the insertion of his name in the diplomas of the discharged veterans of both.

Bassus was later employed by Vespasian on a mission to pacify Campania,¹ and also in Judaea, where he died soon afterwards.²

JEWISH WAR.

ARCH OF TITUS.

The most important epigraphical evidence for the Jewish war is the Arch of Titus, erected to Titus, after his death, on the highest point of the Sacra Via, to commemorate the conquest of Judaea and the capture of Jerusalem. On this arch, which is still partially standing, there are reliefs representing Titus bringing the spoils from Jerusalem, among which can be recognized the seven-branched candlestick, the golden table, the silver trumpets, and other temple ornaments.³ The arch also bore the following inscription.

9. Senatus | populusque Romanus | divo Tito divi Vespasiani f. | Vespasiano Augusto.

(C. I. L. VI, 945.)

In the Codex Einsiedlensis, there has been preserved a copy of an inscription, said to have been upon another arch in the Circus Maximus.

10. Senatus populusq. Romanus | Imp. Tito Caesari divi Vespasiani f. Vespasiano Augusto, | pontif. max., trib. pot. X, imp. XVII, cos. VIII, p. p., principi suo, | quod, praeceptis patris consiliisq. et auspiciis, gentem | Iudaeorum domuit et urbem Hierusolymam, omnibus ante | se ducibus, regibus, gentibus aut frustra petitam aut | omnino intemptatam, delevit.

(C. I. L. VI, 944.)

Date—July 1, 80–July 1, 81 (probably 81⁴).

⁴ Tribunician power X occurs even with emperor XV—no. 146.

In 66 the Jewish insurrection broke out, during the procuratorship of Gessius Florus. Since Cestius Gallus, governor of Syria, showed himself incapable of quelling this revolt, Nero, then in Greece, appointed Mucianus legate of Syria, and assigned to Vespasian the task of putting down the rebellion of the Jews.

Vespasian mustered his army at Ptolemais in 67, and spent the years 67 and 68 in subduing Galilee, the coast, and the regions beyond the Jordan. On the death of Nero he suspended operations to await the confirmation of his power by the new emperor. His own elevation to the principate still further delayed the completion of the task.

In 70 the war was resumed by Vespasian's son, Titus, and was brought to a successful end by the capture of Jerusalem, after a five months' siege, in September, 70. Titus carried on his operations as the legate of Vespasian, or praeceptis patriis consiliisque et auspiciis. A triumph was celebrated by father and son, in the following year, in honor of the victory.

The statement in the last three lines of inscription 10 is mere flattery. Even if the Romans were not acquainted with the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar and by Antiochus Epiphanes—an improbable supposition—they could not have been ignorant of its capture by their own Pompey in 63 B. C.¹

REWARDING OF OFFICERS.

After the capture of Jerusalem, Titus rewarded with the customary decorations of honor those of his officers who had especially distinguished themselves.² Several inscriptions of officers that shared in these honors have been discovered.

⁶ The customary form would be a divo Vespasiano et divo Tito. Probably through ignorance the names are given as at the time of the reward.

Imperator is regularly used as a cognomen of Titus during his father's life. Cf. nos. 13, 54, 64, 68, 70, 74, 89, 106, 152, 153, 154, 155, 161, 176, 201, 225, 320, 321, 322, 336. As a praenomen it is rarer and was perhaps not strictly correct. It was never, as far as known, so used at Rome. Cf. nos. 12, 29, 44, 47, 138, 139, 140, 145, 147, 203, 204.

C. Valerius Clemens seems to have fought in the Jewish war under Vespasian only, and not under Titus—sub divo Vespasiano Aug., patre. He may have been sent to some other station in the East, or may have gone to Italy with Mucianus or to Alexandria with Vespasian. The Gaetulians were perhaps assigned lands at or near Taurini after the war.

TRIBUTE IMPOSED ON THE JEWS.

After the capture of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple by Titus, Vespasian finally reduced Judaea to a province, and ordered that the two drachmas that every Israelite had been accustomed to pay yearly to the temple service should be transferred to the Capitoline Jupiter.⁴ Euschemon, of the following inscription, was a collector of this tribute under some one of the Flavians.

REBELLION IN THE WESTERN PROVINCES.

In connection with the revolt that broke out in Gaul and Germany after Nero's death, we have an inscription to C. Dillius Vocula.

23. C. Dillio A. f. Ser. Voculae, | trib. milit. leg. I, IIIIviro
viarum curandar., | q. provinc. Ponti et Bithyniae, tr. pl., pr., |
leg. in Germania leg. XXII Primigeniae, | Helvia T. f. Procula, uxor, fecit.

(C. I. L. VI, 1402.)

Vocula, at first for Vitellius, and after his death for Vespasian, was the last of the Roman officers in Gaul and Germany to hold out against the rebels. Part of the soldiers remained with him for a time, but finally, judging the Roman cause hopeless, deserted and declared for the imperium Galliarum, proclaimed by Classicus. Vocula determined upon suicide, but before he could carry out his intention was slain by a renegade legionary, an emissary of Classicus.¹

The addition in Germania in the fourth line of the inscription is unusual, and serves to indicate here the scene and circumstances of Vocula's end, which would not otherwise appear upon the inscription. The death of Vocula occurred in 70, and this monument was probably set up not long afterwards.

DISTURBANCES IN GERMANY.

There are several inscriptions that seem to point to some trouble with the Germans about 73-74.

(Dessau, 997.)

¹ For Vocula and the revolts in the west cf. Tac. H. IV, 12-37; 54-79; V, 14-26.

We know that Cn. Pinarius Cornelius Clemens was legate of Germany in 74.¹ This inscription would seem to indicate that during his legateship he successfully quelled some disturbance, probably of the Germans across the Rhine. It is not probable that this refers to the revolt after the death of Nero. Cornelius Clemens is not likely to have held the legateship so long. Moreover a diploma was granted, May 21, 74, to the veterans serving under him,² and this may very naturally have been done at the close of a successful campaign.

We have also other evidence tending to confirm this conjecture of a German war about 73-74.

These two brothers, adopted sons of Cn. Domitius Afer,¹ were both praefecti auxiliorum omnium adversus Germanos, Lucanus probably succeeding Tullus. To what occasion does this refer? Wilmanns' remarks: "Expediitio Germanica non video quae alia possit, nisi a. 70/71." The chief objection to this, as noted by Dessau², is that, according to the inscriptions, the brothers had already been made patricians by Vespasian before they held this prefecture, and Vespasian certainly did not create patricians previous to his entrance upon the censorship in 73.⁴ This lends greater strength to the supposition just made of a campaign against the Germans in 73-74. No such occurrence is mentioned by Suetonius, Dio Cassius, or any other historian. However, our records for this period in the history of Rome are so scanty that some short campaign against the ever troublesome German tribes may have escaped notice by the historians and be preserved to us only through inscriptions—an occurrence by no means without parallel.⁵

REBELLION OF PISO.

In 70, L. Calpurnius Piso, proconsul of Africa, was suspected of forming a conspiracy against Vespasian. Mucianus, then in control for Vespasian at Rome, despatched a centurion, Papirius, to bring about Piso's death. Piso discovered the design and had the centurion slain. He was himself, however, afterwards put to death by order of Valerius Festus, legate of the army of Africa, who had been a secret partisan of Vespasian against Vitellius.⁶

Festus, or C. Calpetanus Rantius Quirinalis Valerius Festus, is well known from the inscriptions.

27. C. Calpetano | Rantio | Quirinali | Valerio P. f. Pomp. Festo, | *IIII*vir. viar. curand., tr. mil. | leg. VI Victr., quaestori, seviro | equit. Aug. pro pr. provinciae | Pannoniae et provinciae | Hispaniae, | patrono, | plebs urbana.

Tergeste in Venetia.

(C. I. L. V, 531.)

Valerius Festus was legate of the army of Africa in 69-70¹ and suffect consul in 71.² While in Africa he won a victory over the Garamantes, for which he received the customary decorations after his return to Rome, probably at the time of the triumph celebrated by Vespasian and Titus. He was curator of the banks and channel of the Tiber in 73³, and seems to have been sent in the same year as governor of Pannonia.⁴ He was governor of Spain in 79-80.⁵

Papirius, the envoy sent by Mucianus, is undoubtedly to be identified with the C. Papirius Aequos of the following inscription.

28. (a) T. Caesari | Vespasiano, imp. III, | pontif., tr. pot. II, cos. II;

(b) Imp. Caesari | Vespasiano Aug., | pontif. max., tr. pot. IIII, | imp. VIIII, p. p., cos. IIII;

⁶ Some of the copyists indicate the fact that Domitiano had been erased but was still legible. On the erasures see Suet. Dom. 23; Cagnat, Cours d'Épig. lat., pp. 164-167; Egbert, Latin Inscr. pp. 122 and 411.

(d) C. Papirius Aequos, centurion leg. III Aug., testamento poni iussit | ex auri p. X.

(C. I. L. VI, 932.)

Date, July–December, 72.

This dedicatory inscription was on a oblong marble base, in which were three holes, where images of Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian are believed to have been set up. (b) was in the center, (a) to the left, and (c) to the right, while (d) extended beneath the others. (a) is still in existence, having been broken off from the rest, which we possess now only in copy.

It might be argued from the amount set aside for this dedicatory stone that Papirius stood high in the favor and confidence of Vespasian and Mucianus, and had perhaps been employed in other services of a similar delicate nature.

DISTURBANCES IN THE EAST.

At the beginning of Vespasian's reign, Vologeses, king of the Parthians, was very friendly, and even offered to aid Vespasian in his contest with Vitellius, but his help was not needed.¹ About 75, the Alans invaded Parthia and Vologeses requested help of the Romans. Vespasian refused to grant it, although Domitian, emulous of the laurels won by his brother in the Jewish war, urged that a force be sent under his command to aid the Parthians in driving out the Alans.² Vologeses was forced to cope alone with the invaders, and, in revenge, invaded the eastern provinces of the empire, but was driven back by Trajan (father of the future emperor), who was at that time proconsul of Asia.³ Vespasian must have made preparations to receive this attack, and among these was probably an alliance with a certain Mithridates, king of the Iberians. Mithridates naturally desired to fortify his capital,

³ See nos. 257–259. On the trouble with Vologeses and the invasion of the Alans, see Dio, LXVI, 15, 3; Jos. B. I. VII, 7, 4; Aur. Vict. Caes. 9, 10; Epit. 9, 12; Pliny, Paneg. 14.

Metskheta, and Vespasian seems to have assisted in this work. The fortifications were erected at the entrance to the valley in which the town was situated. No trace of them remains to-day. This event, as well as the fact that there was a Mithridates, king of Iberia in 75, is known only through the following inscription.

29. ¹ No diplomas of this sort issued to legionary soldiers are in existence except those to the soldiers of the first and second Adiutrix. These two legions were formed from the classici by Galba and Vespasian, and hence were not composed of Roman citizens as were the other legions. Cf. de Ruggiero, Dizionario Epigrafico, I, p. 86 f. For a discussion of the diplomata militaria see Mommsen, C. I. L. III, pp. 902–919.

² At this period the term of service of the legionaries was fixed at twenty years, that of the praetorians at sixteen, that of the urban cohorts at twenty, and that of the auxiliaries at twenty-five. Many, of course, served beyond the usual term.

² Undoubtedly a town of Dalmatia, derived from the Daesitiales,—Pliny, N. H. III, § 143; Vell. Pat. II, 115, 4; Strabo, VII, 5, 3. The witnesses whose names are given are all from Dalmatian towns,—Salonae, Iader, and Nedinum. In diplomas of the year 71 and earlier the witnesses were usually comrades and fellow-countrymen of the discharged veteran. So in no. 31 the soldier Marcus is from Gerasa in Syria, and of the witnesses, three are from Laodicea, three from Antioch, and one from Caesarea or Turris Stratonis, all in Syria. Later, the witnesses were chosen from among the Roman citizens of the lower classes, who may have made a business of such attestations, since the same name frequently recurs.

The first tablet is fragmentary and the second, containing the names of the witnesses, is missing. I have followed the supplement of Mommsen².

The term of service shows that this diploma belongs to the marines, and it is very probable that, like no. 32, it was issued to the classis Ravennas, under Sex. Lucilius Bassus. Tacitus³ states that this fleet was manned in great part by men from Pannonia and Dalmatia. That two diplomas were issued to the veterans of the same fleet at so short an interval might be explained on the ground that the diploma given in no. 32 was issued only to those deducti in Pannoniam, this one to the remainder.

He was noted as a delator under Nero, and on the death of that emperor was attacked by Helvidius Priscus as a delator and by Licinius Caecina, a partisan of Otho, as a supporter of Vitellius. He regained favor under Vespasian, but became involved in the conspiracy of Caecina Alienus in 79, was tried and convicted, and afterwards committed suicide. ⁴ Legate of Numidia in 80 and of Pannonia in 98,—see no. 141, and C. I. L.
III, p. 862.

That the diploma of which this fragment has been preserved was issued by one of the Flavian emperors is certain, as is clear from the names of the men who are given as the consuls. December 30th, the day on which it was granted, was the birthday of Titus;¹ hence it has been conjectured that it was issued by him.² The date would then be 79, since we know the consuls of December, 80³.

The ground for this inference seems to me very slight. Moreover, a recently discovered inscription⁴ makes it probable that Cn. Pinarius Aemilius Cicatricula was legatus Augusti of Numidia—a praetorian legateship—in 80. He could not, then, have been consul in 79. It is very probable that the diploma was issued by Domitian early in his reign, and on Titus's birthday as an honor to him.

COLONIZATION OF VETERANS.

After the close of the wars that marked the beginning of his reign, Vespasian settled some of his discharged veterans as colonists in the towns of Italy, and even of the provinces. Reate, in the territory of the Sabini, his own native town,⁵ was one of the places to which these colonists were sent, and we have five inscriptions from Reate of veterans who were settled there.

Paestum, in Lucania, was also increased by a colony of veterans², and others were sent to Pannonia³. Naturally, after the civil wars there was great need of recolonizing many of the towns both of Italy and of the provinces, and also of providing homes for the soldiers not needed in the regular forces. From various sources, we have the record of a considerable number of places thus recolonized by Vespasian.⁴

CENSORSHIP.

DATE.

Perhaps never in the history of Rome, at least until the time of the barbarian invasians, did the condition of the empire require the exercise of the duties of the censorship more than at the beginning of Vespasian's reign. The office was undertaken by Vespasian and his son Titus. The question of the exact date and duration of this censorship has puzzled many historians, and even in histories of recent date errors are frequently made.

Censorinus¹ fixes the date of the lustrum as 74². Pliny³ says that Vespasian undertook the duties of the censorship intra quadriennium. This led many to suppose that the censorship continued through the years 71-74; but Mommsen⁴ has pointed out that the words are to be taken as meaning, not "during four years," but "four years ago,"—i. e., four years before the date at which Pliny is writing.

We have no other literary evidence bearing upon this point; hence we are compelled to depend upon the inscriptions to fix the date of the beginning of the censorship. From this source we obtain much more definite information.

(C. I. G. I, 3418.)

From nos. 44 and 46 it can be seen that Vespasian entered upon the censorship before July 1, 73². No. 43 would seem to point to a date previous to his designation to his fifth consulship, which took place in March, 73³. If this were so, the date would probably be January 1, 73; but in no. 45 we have censor designatus with consul designatus V, which would seem to throw the date between March 1 and July 1. Both inscriptions cannot be correct. In no. 43, the fact that Vespasian had been elected to his fifth consulship may have been omitted, or, as the inscription is very fragmentary, it may even, conceivably, have read censor des.

In the present condition of the evidence, it seems best to accept the month of April,—a very natural time⁴,—in the year 73, as the date at which Vespasian and Titus entered upon the censorship.

The date of the designation to the censorship cannot be so readily determined. Chambalu⁵ accepts the date November, 72, with some show of probability, it is true, but with no really tangible ¹ (b) was sent by Soromenho to Henzen, and by him first edited in Epigraphica IV, pp. 9–10. (a) had been previously known. It is probable that both are not ancient, but that one was taken from the other. The variations are slight. Though the last line of (b) may be rendered as above, it is more probably a corruption of (a).

² The same can be shown from the inscriptions on the Tiber cippi,—nos. 86–88.

(Eph. Ep. IV, 779.)

Date, July – December, 71.

It is seen that, according to the inscriptions, Titus was censor designatus before the end of the year 71. It might, perhaps, be argued that this is merely honorary,—on the supposition that the intention of Vespasian and Titus to undertake the censorship was known, but that the formal election did not take place until about November, 72. To me, however, this seems almost inconceivable, and I should prefer to consider that the election had taken place, perhaps about the time of the triumph in 71, and that it was not considered best to enter upon the actual duties of the office until early in 73. Such designations a considerable length of time in advance were not uncommon.³

GRANT OF LATIN RIGHTS IN SPAIN.

One of the chief acts of Vespasian's reign, undertaken during the censorship, was the grant of the ius Latii to all the civitates of Spain.⁴ This was, perhaps, a tribute to the memory of Galba, ¹ The supplement of Mommsen, (C. I. L. X, 1420), cens., pontif., cannot be accepted. It would be a most unusual order of titles, and, in any case, Titus could not possibly have borne the title censor at this date. The supplement that I have given seems with practical certainty the correct one.

² See no. 221, note.

³ See Mommsen, Staatsr. I, pp. 586–588.

⁴ Pliny, N. H. III, § 30. Josephus, (Contra Ap. II, 4), when he says that the "Iberians are called Romans," must refer to the bestowal of the ius Latii by Vespasian. The statement is inexact. Only a limited number, through their occupancy of municipal offices, would receive full Roman citizenship.

as well as a reward for the loyalty of Spain to his own cause in the war with Vitellius.¹ We have a number of inscriptions that bear upon this grant of Latin rights.

Perhaps in memory of certain rights granted by Vespasian, though not necessarily the ius Latii in its usual form.³

In addition to the inscriptions quoted above, there is further proof of the great number of towns that were benefited by this grant of the ius Latii in the inscriptions of communities that are spoken of as municipia Flavia, or in some way indicated as such. The following is a list of these.

² The inscription is variously restored. I have followed approximately the supplement of Mommsen (C. I. L. II, 2069, note).

³ Mommsen (Provinces, Eng. Trans. I, p. 73, note 1) calls attention to the fact that, "As the Latin communal constitution is unsuited for a community not organized as a town, those Spanish communities which still after Vespasian's time lacked urban organization must either have been excluded from the bestowal of Latin rights or have had special modifications to meet their case. The latter may be regarded as having more probability."

ADLECTION.

One of the tasks undertaken by Vespasian and Titus in connection with the censorship was the purification of the senatorial and equestrian orders, and the addition of new members to these orders and to the patriciate by means of the right of adlection, which was very freely exercised.¹ Among the new patricians created by this means were Annius Verus, grandfather of the emperor Marcus Aurelius,² and Cn. Julius Agricola³. The inscriptions preserve for us the record of others raised to the patriciate or advanced to the rank of praetor⁴ or tribune by Vespasian and Titus.

Praeneste in Latium.

(C. I. L. XIV, 2925.)

Cornutus Tertullus was praefectus aerarii with the younger Pliny during the reign of Nerva, suffect consul with him, September, 100, and succeeded him as legate of Pontus and Bithynia.⁵

¹ Borghesi (Oeuv. V, p. 359) assigns this inscription to L. Neratius Marcellus, brother of the jurist Priscus (Dig. XXXIII, 7, 12, 43), who was legate of Britain in 103 (C. I. L. III, p. 864). Cf. also Pliny, Ep. III, 8, 1; C. I. L. IX, 1455.

² Mommsen (C. I. L. VI, 1548, note) compares Dio, LXVIII, 2; Pliny, Ep. VII, 31, 4.

³ Nos. 25 and 26.

⁴ It has been suggested (C. I. L. XIV, 2925, note) that this may be the son of the Plancius Varus of Tac. H. II, 63, and the adopted son of C. Iulius Cornutus Tertullus; but the identification is not certain.

Urbs Salvia in Picenum.

(C. I. L. IX, 5533.)

C. Salvius Liberalis Nonius Bassus was a well-known orator and advocate.¹ Suetonius² says of him: Salvium Liberalem in defensione divitis rei ausum dicere: Quid ad Caesarem, si Hipparchus sestertium milies habet? et ipse [Vespasianus] laudavit. This inscription would seem to prove that Vespasian not only ipse laudavit, but also recognized the fearlessness and worth of the man in a more substantial manner by rapid advancement in rank.

He was elected a member of the Fratres Arvales, March 1, 78,³ and is mentioned in the Acta for the years 78, 81, 86, 87, and 101,⁴ but never during the later years of Domitian's reign. He may have fallen into disfavor with Domitian and have been obliged to leave Rome, or at least to lead a life of retirement, until Nerva came to the throne. The date of his consulship is unknown. An inscription containing his wife's name has also been discovered.⁵

GRAIN SUPPLY.

The stormy period of civil wars after the death of Nero naturally made the question of the supply of grain for the people of Rome an urgent one, and it was one of the first with which Ves-

¹ Either in the war of 70-71 or in that of 73-74.

² Since the seventh Gemina apparently did not bear the name Pia before Caracalla, Hübner (C. I. L. III, 726) suggests that the true reading is Cl(audiae). This is almost certainly correct.

³ See Mommsen, Staatsr. III, p. 527 ff., particularly p. 536, note 2, and references there given. This adlection may not have been made during the period of the censorship.

⁴ Hence Glitius was a patrician (Marquardt, Staatsver. III, p. 428, note 12). This accounts for the fact that no tribunate or aedileship appears in his cursus honorum.

Even under the republic, the tribes had been made the vehicle for the distribution of corn and money by the state or by individuals, while under the empire this became their sole function. The public largesses were limited to the members of the tribes living in the city of Rome, and the senatorial and equestrian orders were probably excluded from them. The distribution of corn took place monthly.⁴

Date, 77-78. Near Capua in Campania.

Tifata, a mountain ridge near Capua, was noted for its temple of Diana. This goddess was already worshipped there in the time of Sulla, who extended the bounds of the territory devoted to her.³ The territory of Diana on Tifata is mentioned as early as 99 B. C.⁴ This sacred ground seems to have been occupied by private individuals, and restored to the use of the goddess by both Augustus and Vespasian.

Diana Tifatina is frequently mentioned in inscriptions found at or near the city of Capua.⁵

¹ Mentioned by Tacitus, (H. I, 87; II, 12), as a primipilaris who was made a commander by Otho. He was praefectus castrorum in Egypt in 79, (cf. no. 305). See also nos. 307-309.

BOUNDARY SETTLEMENTS.

Naturally, disputes with regard to boundaries between two provinces or districts frequently had to be settled by the provincial legates of the emperor or by special agents sent out by him.¹ A number of such instances occurring in the reign of Vespasian is recorded in the inscriptions.

79. Ex auctoritate | Imp. Caes. Vespasiani | Aug., pontificis max., | trib. potest. V, cos. V, | desig. VI, p. p., | Cn. Pinarius Cornel. | Clemens,² leg. eius propr. | exercitus Germanici | Superioris, inter | Viennenses et Ceutronas | terminavit.

Axima in Alpes Graiae.

(C. I. L. XII, 113.)

Date, March–June, 74.

The territory of the Viennenses, a people of the Allobroges in Gallia Narbonensis, seems to have extended to the boundaries of the Ceutrones, a people living in the Alpes Graiae. That Cornelius Clemens, the legate of Germany, was appointed to settle the boundary between the two peoples, is explained by the fact that the territories of the two were in different provinces, necessitating the settlement of the dispute by an outsider, of higher rank than the governor of Gallia Narbonensis, a praetorian province. The legate of Germany, of consular rank, was the nearest official competent to act in the matter.³

(C. I. L. III, 9938.)

The Asseriatas and Alveritae were two peoples of Dalmatia whose dispute over boundaries was settled by five judges appointed by M. Pompeius Silvanus, the governor of the province.⁴ The affair took place about the time of the elevation of Vespasian to the principate, or perhaps a little before. The Asseriatas are identified with the old town of Asseria, now Podgradje, but the Alveritae have not been located with any certainty.

¹ This inscription should more properly come under the head, Roads and Bridges.

Pompeius Silvanus was suffect consul in 45, proconsul of Africa about 58, legate of Dalmatia during 69-70, and one of the leaders under Antonius Primus in the invasion of Italy by the party of Vespasian. Sabora in Baetica.

(C. I. L. II, 1423.)

Date, July 29, 77.¹

In this letter Vespasian grants to the Saborensians the right to remove their town from a hill to a better or more commodious site on the plain below. The location of Sabora is doubtful. It may have been at Cafiete, where this tablet was found, or at Teba del Condado, a town not far distant, or somewhere between the two.

The permission to build the town on the plain sub meo nomine undoubtedly implies that Sabora was a municipium Flavium, having obtained the ius Latii from Vespasian.

The "revenues received from Augustus" were probably established by him in 27 B. C.,² when he made the first settlement in regard to the division and form of his government, and at the same time, probably, regulated the affairs of the provinces. The statement of the method to be pursued should the Saborensians desire new revenues is interesting as showing something of the working system of provincial administration in its connection with the emperor.

The Vanacini were located in northern Corsica, probably on the site of the modern Erbalunga. That they had a government, is shown by the form of address in this epistle, but Mommsen⁶ thinks that this was not of Roman or Latin form.

TIBER CIPPI.

The regulation of the Tiber, to guard against floods at times of high water, was of the greatest importance to the city of Rome. This regulation was in charge of special curatores riparum et alvei Tiberis, who saw that the bed was kept free by dredging, and that the embankments and the mouths of the sewers were repaired when necessary.² It was probably on occasion of such repairs of the banks that the cippi were set up. Three of these of the time of Vespasian have been thus far discovered.

BUILDING ACTIVITY.

ROME.

At the beginning of the Flavian period the city of Rome had not yet recovered from the great fire under Nero, and the lesser conflagration kindled by the Vitellians had added to the ruins. It was deformis incendiis ac ruinis.² Vespasian immediately set about clearing away the ruins and restoring the temples and other buildings, as well as erecting new structures. Among the temples thus restored, we know of those of Jupiter Capitolinus,³ Vesta⁴, and Divus Claudius.⁵ Vespasian also built the temples of Sacra Urbs⁶ and of Peace.⁷

In relation to this building activity of the reigns of Vespasian and Titus we have the following inscriptions.

¹ His praenomen was Gaius, and he was suffect consul in November, 70; see nos. 175 and 241.

² Suet. Vesp. 8.

³ Tac. H. IV, 53; Suet. Vesp. 8; Dio, LXVI, 10. Although we have no inscription from this temple, there is a record in the Acta Arvalium (no. 159), of a meeting of the members of that college to offer their vows for the restoration and dedication of the temple by Titus, who was sole emperor at that time. Curiously enough, this meeting had to be held in the temple of Ops near by, since the Capitol had again burned; cf. Suet. Dom. 5; Dio, LXVI, 24; Plut. Popl. 15.

⁷ Suet. Vesp. 9. No inscription of this temple has been found, but no divinity was so frequently inserted by Vespasian on his coins as Pax. See Eckhel, VI, p. 334, and compare the dedications of the inscriptions, nos. 174, 175, 201, 289.

(C. I. L. VI, 940.)

The collegium subrutorum is interpreted by Mommsen³ as referring to those whose work it was to dig out the ruins of buildings destroyed by fire or some other cause. They must have been very busy at this time.

There follows an inscription of a clerk of the marble works under Vespasian.

(C. I. L. VI, 935.)

This inscription was originally engraved on the epistyle of the northwest portico of the Templum Sacrae Urbis,⁷ which on the fall of the portico was broken. Two fragments have been found, from which the inscription is restored. The building seems to have been intended to hold the archives and the records in connection with the restorations, surveys, etc., made during the censorship.¹ It must also have contained the plan or Forma Urbis, according to the reconstruction in the reign of Vespasian. The reconstruction of Severus and Caracalla was certainly affixed to its outside wall towards the Forum Pacis.

The building, which was turned into a church by Pope Felix IV in 526, is still well preserved, and most of the fragments of the last map are in existence in the Capitoline museum. There are, in the Vatican, manuscript copies of the missing portions.²

² For a general discussion of the Templum Sacrae Urbis, see Lanciani, Ruins and Excavations, pp. 94-98, 211-214; Middleton, Remains of Ancient Rome, II, p. 17. Middleton suggests that some of the existing parts of the marble plan may date from the time of Vespasian, basing his conjecture on the fact that the drawing on some fragments is more carefully executed than that on others, and that there are slight differences in the scale of various parts. The conjecture has no real foundation. Just recently, a new fragment of the plan was found, and the erroneous statement became current that this was certainly part of the edition of Vespasian, but this error has since been corrected. The new fragment is of the same date as the others. Cf. Lanciani, Bull. Com. 1901, p. 3 ff.

³ Probably the nephew of Vespasian, though this is questioned by Desau, Prosopographia, II, p. 74, no. 232. He is certainly not to be identified with T. Flavius Sabinus, consul in 69 and 72, as is done by the editors of the Corpus. For T. Flavius Sabinus, see nos. 152 and 169. For Flavius Sabinus, the nephew of Vespasian, cf. Suet. Dom. 10, 12; Dio, LXV, 17; Juv. II, 33; Philost. Vita Apoll. Tyan. VII, 7.

⁴ The supplement is somewhat arbitrary, but if it is correct the date is between January 1st and July 1st, 77. Cf. nos. 84 and 92.

of the façade of some temple. It looks somewhat as though it might be a fragment of no. 92, with the last line lost; but this would necessitate the assumption that Marlianus, who copied no. 92, very carelessly omitted the word refecit, and also that on the edifice as restored by Severus and Caracalla the person who had formerly restored it was commemorated, but not the original builder. It seems certain that this inscription refers to some unknown restoration made by Vespasian.

95. Imp. C. Vespasianus, pontifex maximus, | tribuniciae potestatis, imp. VII, pater patriae, | constituit, destinavit, faciendum curavit. (C. I. L. VI, 939.)

This inscription has been preserved in the Codex Vossianus, and is obviously incorrectly copied. Mommsen¹ suggests the following as very like the original.

Imp. Caes. Vespasianus Aug., pont. max., | trib. potest. II, imp. VII, p. p., | cos. III, des. IIII, faciendum curavit.

96. (on front) Iovi.

There is a number of fragments of inscriptions from the Flavian amphitheatre,² some of which, judging from the form of the letters, are probably as early as the reign of Titus; but they are all very fragmentary and by no means certain in date. For a discussion of these fragments, see Lanciani, Bull. Com. 1880, p. 211 ff.; Hülsen, Bull. Com. 1894, p. 312 ff.

In like manner, there are other inscriptions³ that, simply from the form of the letters, might be assigned to this period, but the evidence for them is not strong enough to warrant their insertion in this collection.

Mention is made of the *thermae Titi*¹ in an inscription dating from about the end of Hadrian's reign.²

In a copy of a military diploma issued by Domitian on September 19, 82, the location of the original tablet is given as follows:

98. Descriptum et recognitum ex tabula aenea | quae fixa est
Romae in Capitolio in tribuna|li Caesarum Vespasiani, T., Do-mitiani.

Debeletz in Moesia Inferior. (C. I. L. III, p. 1960, ll. 30-32.)

This is the only mention of any such tribunal. In two diplomas of the year 86,³ appear the words; in Capitolio post tropaea Germanici in tribunali quae sunt ad aedem fidei p. R.; and in C. I. L. VI, 912, l. 12, the words in tribunali marmoreo are to be referred to the same tribunal. Sometimes there are found tribunals, just as altars, erected to the dead⁴ or to divinities⁵; but this tribunal Vespasiani, T., Domitiani, since it was dedicated at least as early as the beginning of Domitian's reign, is certainly unique and unparalleled.⁶

ITALY AND THE PROVINCES.

That the building activity of Vespasian and Titus was not confined entirely to Rome is shown by the following inscriptions.

⁷ The inscription does not give an exact enumeration of titles; hence tribuniciae potestatis has not here its usual meaning of tribuniciae potestatis I.

The inscription was found at Varia¹ in Latium among the ruins of an ancient temple. This temple of Victory is usually identified with the fanum Vacunae of Horace, Ep. I, 10, 49: Haec tibi dictabam post fanum putre Vacunae. The comment of the scholiast Porphyrio on this passage is: Vacuna in Sabinis dea, quae sub incerta specie est formata: hanc quidam Bellonam, alii Minervam, alii Dianam ----- Here the sentence breaks off. Ps-Acron fills it out: quidam Minervam, alii Dianam putaverunt, nonnulli etiam Venerem esse dixerunt, sed Varro in primo rerum divinarum Victoriam ait, quod ea maxime hi gaudent qui sapientiae vacent.² The place where the inscription was found and the description of the condition of the temple as given both in the inscription and by Horace substantiate the identification of the two.

Dessau³ has given the objections to this identification: (1) We are not certain that Vacuna was Victoria among the Romans. (2) Why should Vespasian change the name of the temple?

However, as we have seen, there is some reason to believe that Vacuna was Victoria; and Vespasian might naturally take the opportunity afforded by his restoration of the temple to give it the more distinctively Roman name, even if the original name had not already been altered since the time of Horace.

This inscription was probably set up to commemorate the building of the stationary camp at Carnuntum. Judging from the location of the fragments when found, it was inscribed at the sides of the porta decumana. We know that the Pannonian camp was still at Poetovio in 69,³ but that it was at Carnuntum when Pliny wrote his "Natural History,"⁴ so it must have been moved during Vespasian's reign. The fifteenth Apollinaris was sent back to Pannonia from the East by Titus in 71, after the Jewish war.⁵

The following Greek inscriptions are from buildings dedicated to the emperor Titus.

Nicostratus erected both an amphitheatre and a stadium, the former, at least, dedicated to Titus. The first inscription is especially important, since it records the fact that M. Ulpus Traianus, father of the emperor Trajan, was proconsul of Asia in 79.¹

¹ M. Ulpus Traianus was legate of the tenth Fretensis under Vespasian in the first years of the Jewish war. The legion was placed under Larcus Lepidus in 70 (Jos. B. I. VI, 4, 3), and as Trajan is not mentioned during the latter part of the war, he probably accompanied Vespasian to Alexandria and thence to Rome. He was suffect consul in some year unknown (Henzen, Eph. Ep. I, p. 188, note 2, suggests the year 68; Waddington, Fastes des Provinces Asiatiques, no. 100, the year 70 or 71), and governor of Syria in 76. Cf. nos. 257–259; *C. I. AQUEDUCTS.

The water supply of Rome was another problem of importance with which both Vespasian and Titus dealt, as is witnessed by the inscriptions recording the restoration and repair of aqueducts by them.

IIIO. Imp. Caesar Vespasianus August., pontif. max., trib. pot. II, imp. VI, cos. III, desig. IIII, p. p., | aquas Curtiam et Caeruleam, perductas a divo Claudio et postea intermissas dilapsasque | per annos novem, sua impensa urbi restituit.

Date, July, 80–June, 81.¹

These inscriptions were found at the Praenestine Gate—now the Porta Maggiore—where the Claudian aqueduct entered the city.

The Claudian aqueduct, bringing in the water from the Curtian and Caerulean springs, was begun by Caligula in 38 and completed by Claudius in 52.² Nero extended it, after 59, to the Palatine by means of a branch, when he turned the temple of Claudius into a reservoir.³ The aqueduct was forty-six miles long and carried an immense volume of water. Frontinus praises it very highly, calling it opus magnificentissime consummatum,⁴ but there seems to be some ground for the opinion of Middleton⁵ that it was not at first well built, since it required repairing by Vespasian less than twenty years after its completion, and again by Titus ten years later. However, the expression in the second inscription, cum a capite aquarum a solo vetustate dilapsae essent, is certainly a conventional exaggeration, and the need of repairs at the beginning of Vespasian's reign would be sufficiently accounted for by the fact that the aqueduct had not been in use for nine years. Why it should have been thus abandoned three or four years after its extension by Nero is not known. At any rate the reconstruction by Titus put the aqueduct into such good condition as to win the praise of Frontinus twenty years later.¹

The inscription was on the arch of the Marcian aqueduct over the via Tiburtina, which, after the building of the walls of Aurelian, became part of the porta Tiburtina—now porta S. Lorenzo. Above it, on the arch, are inscriptions of restorations by Augustus and by Caracalla.²

This aqueduct was built by order of the senate in 144 B. C., under the direction of the praetor, Q. Marcius Rex, from whom it received its name. It brought water from springs about thirty-eight miles east of Rome.³ It was repaired by Agrippa in 33 B. C.⁴ and by Augustus in 5 B. C. Later restorations were made by Septimius Severus, Caracalla, Diocletian, and others. The aqueduct is still in use under the name Aqua Pia or Aqua Pia Marcia, from Pope Pius IX, who repaired it in 1870.⁵

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

Neither the roads of Italy nor those of the provinces were neglected during the principate of the Flavians. A considerable number of inscriptions, principally on milestones, has been discovered, commemorating repairs, extensions, and the building of new roads.

ROME.

As has been already remarked, the city of Rome at the time of the accession of Vespasian was deformis veteris incendiis ac ruinis, as the result of the fires of Nero and Vitellius, and the general tumult and riot of a period of civil war. Naturally, the streets would be in particularly bad condition and would require the immediate attention that they received from Vespasian.

Each of the milestones also contains an inscription of a restoration by Nerva in 97.

The celebrated Appian way, leading from Rome to Brundisium, was begun by Appius Claudius Caecus, the censor, in 312 B. C., and completed as far as Capua before the end of his censorship.¹ The date of its extension to Beneventum and Brundisium is unknown. The inscriptions above are records of repairs made by Vespasian to the road near the city of Rome.

This inscription is on a large tablet of Albanian stone which was found about thirteen miles from Rome on the Aurelian way, where ancient Lorium was situated. It may refer to some repairs to the via Aurelia, but this is not certain. The via Aurelia led from Rome to Pisa and thence to the Maritime Alps. The date of its construction is unknown, but it was a well-known road in the time of Cicero.²

This inscription was on a cippus near the bridge now called S. Nicolai, on the via Cassia. It may commemorate the building of this bridge by Claudius and its restoration by Vespasian. The via Cassia led from Rome to Arretium, Florence, and Lucca. It was a frequented highway at least as early as Cicero's time.¹

Septempeda in Picenum.

The via Flaminia was the great highway from Rome to Ariminum. Septempeda was a small town on a branch of this road leading from Nuceria, in Umbria, to Ancona. The milestones of the branch were numbered from Rome.

The Flaminian road was found of great importance on occasion of the invasion of Italy by the forces of Vespasian under Antonius Primus.² Vespasian added to its convenience by constructing a tunnel through the rock at Intercisa.⁴

These inscriptions show that the via Flavia, which extended from Tergeste along the coast to Pola, was begun in the latter part of Vespasian's reign and completed by Titus. No. 120 was probably brought to Venice from the vicinity of Tergeste. Its presence at Venice could otherwise be explained only by the assumption that the road extended beyond Tergeste towards Altinum and Patavium, and this is extremely unlikely.

The milestones XXII and XXVIII,¹ of which only the numbers remain, were probably likewise set up by Vespasian or Titus.

The via Latina, extending from Rome to Capua, was one of the oldest of the roads of Italy. We have no account of its construction. Ad Flexum, near which was found the milestone containing the second inscription above, was at the junction of a branch of the main road, running to Venafrum and Aesernia. The mile-

The milestones were on the road from Carales to Turrus, which was probably one of the oldest in Sardinia. The existing milestones begin with the reign of Nero.¹ I should identify Sex. Subrius Dexter with the Subrius Dexter mentioned by Tacitus² as a tribune of a praetorian cohort in 69.

These inscriptions raise the question of the government of Sardinia and Corsica. Augustus in 27 B. C. assigned them as one province to the senate,³ but in 6 B. C. the province was placed under procurators.⁴ Nero again assigned it to the senate.⁵ It is generally, and I think correctly, held that Vespasian again placed it under procurators.¹ The evidence for this consists in the inscriptions on these milestones and the epistle of Vespasian to the Vanacinians.² Haverfield,³ with others, holds that the province remained under proconsuls until after Commodus, and that the name of the procurator in the inscriptions above is a later addition. It is true that we know of a proconsul of Sardinia under Commodus,⁴ and procurators later,⁵ but this is of little weight, since the province may have become again proconsular between Vespasian and Commodus, and procuratorial later. The only other point which might seem to favor the view of Haverfield is found in the following fragment.

(Eph. Ep. VIII, 785.)

The fragment is assigned by Tamponi⁶ to Domitian, but Haverfield⁷ shows that the partial restoration as here given is more probably correct. If the fragment is correctly reported, the v. e. may be a later addition, since the title is not found until much later than the time of Vespasian.⁸ It is certainly not permissible, however, to argue from this slight basis that the name of the procurator in the two previous inscriptions is a later addition, that the reference to the procurators in the epistle to the Vanacinians is of no value, and that the province of Sardinia and Corsica remained under the control of the senate during Vespasian's reign. The main road, from the memorial of Pompey erected on the summit of the Pyrenees, was begun by Caesar⁴ and completed by Augustus,⁵ in whose honor it was named. It was afterwards 'completed' successively by Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero;⁶ restored by Vespasian, then by Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, Caracalla, Maximinus and Maximus, Aurelian, Constantine and Constantius, and Valentinian.⁷ Neither the exact location of the ⁴ The consulship of Titus must have been VII, not VI, to agree with the consulship of Vespasian. The suggestion of Hübner (C. I. L. II, 2477), that the VI is to be accounted for on the assumption that the inscription was set up very early in the year, so that, while the fact that Vespasian was to be one of the consuls for the year 79 was known to the Spanish cities, the name of his colleague was not yet known, is very improbable, to say the least. Both Vespasian and Titus were probably designated consuls for the year 79 in March of the preceding year.

This inscription was found at Aquae Flaviae—a town that probably received its name and the ius Latii from Vespasian—near the bridge over the Tamega river. Its location points to the conclusion that it commemorates a bridge built by these ten cities together, like the bridge built by the eleven Lusitanian cities during Trajan's reign.⁵ We have, however, another inscription of a bridge built by the people of Aquae Flaviae during the reign of Trajan.⁶ On this account, Hübner⁷ thinks that the inscription refers to some other work done in common by the ten cities. Wilmanns⁸ would refer the inscription to the building of some bridge, since it is doubtful whether any other work is known to which different towns contributed. While too much force should not be given to the argument of Wilmanns, I would suggest that a bridge was built over the Tamega by these cities together, and that later this was replaced by a more substantial structure, built by the citizens of Aquae Flaviae alone, without the assistance of the neighboring cities that had contributed to the building of the first bridge. The wording of the other inscription supports this conjecture,—Aquiflavienses pontem lapideum de suo.

If this inscription is dedicatory,¹ the names of Vespasian and his sons are in the dative, the names of the other officials in the ablative. If it is not dedicatory, the names of Vespasian and his sons are also in the ablative. The name of the legion might be considered as nominative, thus assuming that the work was done by the seventh legion together with the ten towns, but this is not likely.

COLLEGIA.

FRATRES ARVALES.

The Fratres Arvales, a collegium of extreme antiquity, probably revived by Augustus, have played an important part in extending our knowledge of the history of the first three centuries of the empire, because of the large number of stone tablets, containing inscriptions of their meetings, known as the acta Arvalium, that have been discovered at Rome. These inscriptions range in date from 14 to 241. They not only furnish us a clear idea of the officers and ceremonies of the college, but are also of the greatest value in supplying the means of fixing many important dates that could not otherwise be accurately known.¹

The acta that have been found for Vespasian's reign are very fragmentary, with the exception of those for the year 78. The acta for the reign of Titus are more nearly complete.

(C. I. L. VI, 2052.)

This fragment commemorates sacrifices on the occasion of Vespasian's entrance into the city, among them one Fortunae reduci,⁴ to Fortune who brings back Vespasian in safety to the city.

Unfortunately, there is no means of determining the precise date of this meeting of the college.

¹ Probably a son of the Marius Celsus who was consul in 69 (Tac. H. I., 71; II, 60, et passim), adopted into the Julian gens. He was consul in 86 (C. I. L. III, p. 857) and again in 105 (C. I. L. V, 875; VI, 156, 2075, Spart. Hadr. 3), and was legate of Galatia and the neighboring provinces in some year unknown (C. I. L. III, 250). He is mentioned in the acta for the years 72, 75, 80, 81, 87, 89, 101, 105, (nos. 152, 153, 159, 160; C. I. L. VI, 2065, 2066, 2071, 2074, 2075).

⁴ Suffect consul with Vicirius Martialis under Trajan (C. I. L. II, 2344, where his nomen is given as Marcius; VI, 2018). He is mentioned frequently in the acta between 69 and 105; cf. nos. 153, 155; C. I. L. VI, 2051, 2064-2068, 2070, 2074, 2075.

Perhaps mentioned also in C. I. L. VI, 29015; IX, 4898. His name occurs frequently in the acta for the years 57-86. He died in 86. Cf. nos. 155, 156, 159; C. I. L. VI, 2039-2045, 2064.

⁶ C. Antius A. Iulius Quadratus, suffect consul in July, 93, ordinary consul in 105 with Ti. ³ Consul for the first time in 69 (C. I. L. VI, 2051). When consul-elect for the first time, he was sent by Otho against the Vitellians (Tac. H. II, 36). This T. Flavius Sabinus must not be confounded with Flavius Sabinus, the brother of Vespasian, as is done by Bury, Student's Roman Empire, p. 336, and others. The praenomen of Vespasian's brother was probably not Titus, since this was Vespasian's own praenomen (but see Cagnat, *Cours d'Épig. latine*³, pp. 65 and 67). Moreover, we learn from Tacitus that T. Flavius Sabinus, the consul and general in northern Italy, caused his troops to swear allegiance to Vitellius (H. II, 51), while, at the same time, Flavius Sabinus, the brother of Vespasian and prefect of the city, did the same with the city cohorts (H. II, 55). Neither should he be confounded with the nephew of Vespasian and son of this elder brother, as is sometimes done (cf. no. 93). The relationship, if any, of T. Flavius Sabinus to Vespasian is unknown. Cf. also no. 169; Tac. H. I, 77.

¹ Probably the Ceionius Commodus whose wife was Appia Severa (nos. 277 and 278). Cf. also Sogliano, Di due epigrafi amforarie Pompejane, p. 5, and perhaps Frontinus, De Aq. 70.

² Probably the Novius Priscus who was exiled by Nero in 65, because he was a friend of Seneca (Tac. Ann. XV, 71). He is undoubtedly not the same man as the curator of the Suburan tribe in no. 174. Cf. also no. 333.

³ C. Salonus Matidius Patruinus. There is not sufficient evidence to identify him with the Manlius Patruitus of Tac. H. IV, 45, or with the senator in C. I. L. V, 3117, whose name is missing, as is done by Dessau (Prosopographia, III, p. 162, no. 81). Marini (Atti, p. 158), followed by Borghesi (Oeuv. III, p. 241), conjectured that he was the husband of Ulpia Marciana, sister of Trajan, and the father of Matidia Augusta. The conjecture is very ingenious, but there is hardly enough evidence to warrant it.

⁴ C. Fufius Iunius Tadius Mefitanus, named in acta for the years 78, 80, 81; cf. nos. 156, 159, 160.

² On the death of C. Saloni Matidius Patruinus, the magister, C. Salvius Liberalis Nonius Bassus was elected to the vacant seat in the college, and P. Sallustius Blaesus was elected magister.

³ It is suggested that this read Sex. Vitulasi Nepotis, a name that occurs in C. I. L. IX, 3587, and on a fistula aquaria, discovered some years ago in Rome (Lanciani, Syll. Aq. no. 592). From the size of the letters here, it is probable that, if the conjecture is true, he is given as suffect consul. See Eph. Ep. VIII, p. 328, no. 10.

³ Domitian was undoubtedly proclaimed emperor September 14th, the day after the death of Titus; cf. Suet. Tit. 11; Dio, LXVI, 18; 26; Henzen, Acta Fratrum Arvalium, p. 64. The comitia tribunicia, however, was not held until September 30th (C. I. L. VI, 2060, l. 33).

⁴ The acta for the first half of 81 show that during this year the consuls held office for only two months, since different consuls are given for January, March, and May. A convenient list of suffect consuls will be found in the index.

⁵ The future emperor; cf. nos. 168, 242, 285; Front. De Ag. 102.

It was customary to elect the emperor to membership in this college. He took the position occupied by his predecessor in the principate. When Titus was admitted by his father to a share in the empire, a new decuria—twenty-eight—had to be added to the college for him, since Vespasian occupied the place made vacant by the death of Vitellius.¹

This inscription is on two tablets now in the Capitoline museum, so imbedded in the wall that only the last half of the one and the first half of the other are visible. The fasti extend from 67 to 75, but only the part from 70 to 75, during the reign of Vespasian, is given here.

Although the tablets are reported to have been found at Aquinum, Mommsen⁴ has shown that they must have originally come from Interamna, and not from either Aquinum or the neighboring Casinum, since both of these towns were governed by duumvirs.

He was twice consul (C. I. L. XII, 3637). Although previously an intimate friend of Domitian, he was put to death by him after he became emperor (Suet. Dom. 11). Cf. also nos. 174 and 335.

⁶ Perhaps Sex. Iulius Frontinus; cf. Borghesi, Oeuv. VI, p. 477. Others place the first consulship of Frontinus in 72 or 73; cf. Waddington, Fastes des Prov. Asiat. no. 103. Frontinus was praetor urbanus in 70, governor of Britain about 76-78, proconsul of Asia, curator aquarum, three times consul—the second time in 98, the third time as consul ordinarius with the emperor Trajan in 100. ² Titus became pontifex maximus after the death of Vespasian; his seventh consulate was in 79. The tribunician power and the imperatorship do not correspond to these dates, and should be VIII and XIII (or XV) respectively.

DEIFICATION AND WORSHIP OF EMPERORS.

Both Vespasian and Titus were deified after death, and a temple was erected in their honor by Domitian. Three columns of this temple, which was located near the Capitol, are still standing. It is ordinarily known as the templum Vespasiani, and was dedicated to Vespasian, but it is sometimes called the templum Vespasiani et Titi.¹ The following inscription was upon the epistyle:

209. (a) Divo Vespasiano Augusto s. p. q. R.

(b) Imp. Caess. Severus et Antoninus Pii Felic.
Augg. restituer. (C. I. L. VI, 938.)

There were undoubtedly other temples erected in honor of Vespasian and of Titus. We have the record of one at Cumae in an inscription of the year 289.

SODALES FLAVIALES.

Similar to the sodales Augustales, after the death of Vespasian there was established a collegium called sodales Flaviales. After the death of Titus, we find also sodales Flaviales Titiales, sodales Titiales Flaviales, and sodales Titiales. Dessau,² following Mommsen and Wilmanns, holds that the cult of Titus was placed in the hands of the sodales Flaviales, who then became sodales Flaviales Titiales, and that the order of the adjectives was sometimes reversed, or the Flavialis omitted, because the memory of Titus soon took precedence with the Romans over that of Vespasian. Following this view, it would seem that the name was a matter of individual preference, since the various forms occur apparently indiscriminately at all periods.

It has been suggested to me by Dr. Durham that perhaps there were four classes of these sodales: (1) those charged with the cult of Vespasian—sodales Flaviales; (2) those charged with the cult of Titus—sodales Titiales; (3) those priests of Vespasian to whom was later entrusted the cult of Titus also—sodales Flaviales Titiales; (4) those priests of Titus to whom was entrusted the cult of Vespasian also—sodales Titiales Flaviales. While there are objections to this view, it seems to me better than the other. It receives confirmation from the fact that, in the inscription quoted below, the titles sodalis Flavialis and sodalis Titialis are given separately.

These priests of the Flavian gens sometimes have the name sacerdotes instead of sodales.¹ Their number is unknown.² Outside of the inscriptions the only record of them is in Suetonius Dom. 4: certamini praesedit [Domitianus], ----- adsidentibus Diali sacerdote et collegio Flavialium.

A list of the inscriptions containing mention of these sodales is given below. With the exception of the first one, they are not quoted, since they bear upon the subject of this investigation only in as far as they illustrate the range of this collegium. The general period, at least, of each inscription is, if possible, noted. The latest date at which the priesthood was held, for which we have inscriptional evidence, is about 200.³

Ep.* III, p. 213, note 1) holds that XVvir Flavialium=XVvir sacris faciundis et ex Flavialibus. For a discussion of this collegium, see Dessau, De Sodalibus et Flaminibus Augustalibus, *Eph. His second consulship was probably during the reign of Domitian (Aur. Vict. Epit. 12, 5), and his third consulship may have been under Trajan (Pliny, Paneg. 61). Cf. Mommsen, *Korr. d. Westd. SEVIRI FLAVIALES.

As there were sodales Flaviales after the analogy of the sodales Augustales, so we find in the municipalities, after the death of Vespasian, seviri Flaviales. These sevirs were frequently also seviri Augustales, and are then termed seviri Augustales Flaviales. There are also cases of seviri Augustales Flaviales Titiales Nerviales.² Two examples of inscriptions of these sevirs are given below, followed by a list of the remainder.

FLAMINES.

In addition to the sodales, the cult of the emperors was kept up by flamines. Borghesi¹ was of the opinion that these were chosen from the sodales, but this view is refuted by Dessau,² who shows that the two were in all probability separate institutions. We find inscriptions of flamens of most of the earlier emperors, and it is probably mere chance that there is no record of such priests for Vespasian or Titus.

Although there is no record of flamens of Vespasian or Titus created in Rome, there is a number of inscriptions of municipal flamens of both Vespasian and Titus. A list of these is here given.

This inscription from Rome is referred by Gatti⁹ to the wife of Vespasian, but it may refer to his daughter, who also died before the period of his principate.¹⁰

⁵ It is, of course, possible, though extremely improbable, that the omission of her name in the vow of January 3, 90, may have been for some reason other than her death. Dessau (Prosopographia, II, p. 82, no. 281) shows from the evidence of coins that she was dead before the end of 91, but seems to have disregarded the evidence of the acta.

The diva Domitilla in C. I. L. V, 2829, has usually been considered to refer to the wife of Vespasian, but Mommsen¹ argues that the daughter is meant. He bases his opinion upon a passage of Statius,² in which Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, and Domitilla, the sister of Domitian, are spoken of as deified and stars, but no mention is made of the mother, thus making it probable that she was never deified. If this be true, the Flavia Domitilla Augusta of the inscription above may be the daughter of Vespasian, because of the title Augusta. It is possible that this title was conferred on Vespasian's wife, but she is not so designated in no. 228.

eorum. (C. I. L. VI, 8942.)

The genealogy is apparently as follows: Vespasian and Flavia Domitilla, his wife, had, besides their two sons, a daughter, Flavia Domitilla.³ This daughter had, by a husband whose name is unknown, but who was perhaps of the Flavian gens,⁴ a daughter, who was also named Flavia Domitilla. The latter married her second cousin, Flavius Clemens, son of Flavius Sabinus the elder brother of Vespasian,⁵ and these two had seven children, among whom were the two sons whom Domitian had intended as his successors, and to whom he had given the names Vespasian and Domitian,¹ and the daughter of nos. 230 and 231. The identity of the filia of these two inscriptions, however, is disputed. De Rossi² would supply Flavia Domitilla, and refer to the granddaughter of Vespasian. The principal objection to this is the order of the words, which would be most unusual if such a meaning were intended. Mommsen³ holds that the inscriptions refer to a daughter of Flavia Domitilla, the granddaughter of Vespasian, an interpretation which is better adapted to the order of words in the inscription, and which I have adopted. Mommsen's theory that Flavia Domitilla, the daughter of Vespasian, married her uncle, Flavius Sabinus, and that these two had a daughter, Flavia Domitilla, in addition to their two sons, Flavius Sabinus and Flavius Clemens, is refuted by de Rossi,⁴ and later abandoned by Mommsen, himself.⁵ Dio Cassius⁶ states that Domitian banished Flavia Domitilla, his kinswoman, wife of Flavius Clemens, his cousin. Eusebius⁷ makes her the daughter of the sister of Flavius Clemens, but has certainly confused the relationships.

The location and wording of the inscription make the identification of this Flavia Domitilla with the granddaughter of Vespasian, not his wife or daughter, almost certain.

He subsequently married her, and she bore him a son in 73, but this son did not live long and nothing more is known of him.³

From an inscription of the reign of Domitian,⁴ we learn that Domitia was born on February 11th. The same inscription also gives the natal day of Domitian, October 24th.⁵

We know from Tacitus¹ that Aelianus was in Rome on June 21, 70, and offered up the prayer as pontifex maximus when the corner stone of the new Capitol was laid. Nothing is known of his legateship of Spain; he may even have resigned it for the prefecture of the city before having left Rome.

The eulogistic words of the oratio, in which Vespasian asked triumphal ornaments for him from the senate, refer to his legateship of Moesia during the reign of Nero, the acts and results of which are described above in the inscription.

Aelianus was suffect consul for the first time in 47,² and proconsul of Asia under Nero.³ He was again suffect consul early in January, 74,⁴ Vespasian probably resigning in his favor soon after the beginning of the year.⁵ This date fixes the time of his prefecture of the city.⁶

³ Mommsen (Hermes XIX (1884), p. 644) refers to C. Plinius Secundus—the elder Pliny—but this is improbable; cf. Hirschfeld, Bull. dell' Inst. Arch. Germ. 1887, p. 152; Dessau, Prosopographia, III, p., no. 51. 373.

⁴ Made procurator of Judaea by Claudius; prefect of Egypt 66–70. He was the first to cause the troops to swear allegiance to Vespasian—on the Kalends of July, 70, the day from which Vespasian dated the beginning of his principate. Soon after, he returned to Judaea and held command in the army under Titus. Cf. Tac. Ann. XV, 28, H. I, 11; II, 74, 79; Suet. Vesp. 6; Jos. Antiq. XX, 5, 2; *B. Sex. Vettulenus Cerialis was legate of the fifth Macedonica in the Jewish war.¹ The Cerialis of the following inscription was probably his son.

Perinthus (Heraclea) in Thracian Chersonese.

This Cerialis, governor of Moesia under Vespasian, still held the post in 82, as is shown by a military diploma of that year.² In this diploma his full name, C. Vettulenus Civica Cerialis, is given, removing all question of the identity of the governor of Moesia with Sex. Vettulenus Cerialis, legate of the fifth Macedonica. Civica Cerialis, while proconsul of Asia, was put to death by order of the emperor Domitian.³

(C. I. L. IX, 2827.)

The C. Helvidius Priscus of these inscriptions is probably identical with the Helvidius Priscus who was praetor at the time of the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol in 70, the son-in-law of Thrasea, and one of the boldest of the 'republicans'.² The omission of the list of his offices and honors in no. 273 may be due to the fact that he died in exile.³ Dessau,⁴ as further proof of the identification, quotes the statement of Tacitus,⁵ that Helvidius Priscus was from Cluviae. We know that Cluviae was a municipality of the Arnensian tribe, to which the C. Helvidius Priscus of the first inscription above belonged. The inscriptions may, however, refer to the father or son of Helvidius Priscus, the praetor.

¹ T. Tettienus Serenus, suffect consul with C. Scoedius Natta Pinarianus in year unknown (Borghesi, Oeuv. V, p. 311, conjectured 83), was probably legate of Gallia Lugdunensis, since the first urban cohort, created by Vespasian, had its camp at Lugdunum during the period of the Flavian emperors (see Mommsen, Eph. Ep. V, p. 118-120.). The same is true of Cornelius Gallicanus and Minicius Rufus. For Tettienus Serenus, see also C. I. L. VI, 163 and 1984; perhaps a freedman of his is named in C. I. L. VI, 2184, l. 6, and X, 531.

² Since Vespasian died during his ninth consulship, either the X is an error for IX, or Vespasian is given by mistake as consul in 80. The former seems more probable; the date would then be 79.

This inscription is almost certainly to be assigned to the reign of Vespasian, on account of the formation of the letters. It would seem that, together with the cult of Augustus by the seviri Augustales, there was combined the cult of tutela Augusta by the wives or daughters of the seviri.

This decree of the decurions of Naples grants a place for the burial of Licinius Pollio, son of C. Licinius Proclus. The latter is scarcely to be identified with the Licinius Proculus who was praetorian prefect under Otho.¹ The approximate date of the decree is fixed by the fact that the names of Cornelius Cerialis, Lucius Pudens, and Fulvius Probus also appear in a similar decree, of the year 71, which here follows.

Inscriptions, chiefly sepulchral, have been found of a great number of freedmen of Vespasian and Titus that can be recognized as such by the name T. Flavius and the fact that they were Augusti liberti. It would be an almost endless and certainly profitless task to transcribe these. Among the inscriptions of the city of Rome, where they are naturally most numerous, nearly one hundred were noted, in a search that was by no means exhaustive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

INSCRIPTIONS ON STATUE OF MEMNON.

On the statue or colossus of Memnon at Thebes in Egypt a number of inscriptions has been carved by those who visited it and heard the sound given forth by it when touched by the rays of the morning sun.³ These inscriptions range in date from 69 to 196. The following were carved during the reigns of Vespasian and Titus.

¹ On the consilium instituted by the Lex Aelia Sentia in the year 4 to regulate the manumission of slaves, see Haenel, Corpus Legum ante Iustinianum Latarum, p. 20 ff.; Puchta, Instit. II, § 213, 2.

The dates January 7 and February 15, 81, do not appear in order, and March 9 is written twice. Mommsen⁵ suggests, as an explanation, that Verus did not carve the inscriptions on each date separately, but all at one time.

¹ Prefect of Egypt early in Vespasian's reign; he closed the temple of the Jews there, and died during his prefecture. Cf. Jos. B. I. VII, 10, 2, 4; Pliny, N. H. XIX, § 11; perhaps Kaibel, Inscr. Gr. Sicil. Ital. 2421.

WALL INSCRIPTIONS OF POMPEII.

Of the wall inscriptions of Pompeii, very few can be definitely assigned to the reigns of Vespasian and Titus.

307. M. Epidium Sabinum, d. i. dic., o. v. f. Dig. est. | Defensorem coloniae ex sententia Suedi Clementis,¹ sancti iudicis, | consensu ordinis ob merita eius et probitatem dignum rei publicae faciat. | Sabinus, dissignator, cum plausu facit.

(C. I. L. IV, 768.)

308 M. Epidium Sabinum | ex sententia Suedi Clementis d. v. i. d. | o. v. f.

(C. I. L. IV, 791.)

309. M. Epidium | Sabinum | IIvir. iur. dic. o. v. f., dignum iuvenum. | Suedius Clemens, sanctissimus | iudex, facit vicinis rogantibus.

(C. I. L. IV, 1059.)

The name of M. Epidius Sabinus appears in many others of these wall inscriptions, several of which are fragments of the same sort of electioneering devices.² There is also a fragment of a wall inscription³ in which the letters Vespa are plain. The inscription is too fragmentary and broken to be understood.

¹ The third consulship of Vespasian was in 71, but his colleague was M. Cocceius Nerva. Mommsen (C. I. L. IV, 2555, note) suggests that the inscription should read Vespasiano II et filio, the date then being 70, when Vespasian and Titus were consuls. Henzen (Bull. dell' Inst. Arch. Germ. 1852, p. 95-96) thinks that through negligence the consuls were written who pertain to the same year, but not to the same time of the year, i. e., Domitian was suffect consul in 71 with Cn. Pedius Cascus (cf. nos. 31-33). Garrucci, who reported the inscription (C. I. L. IV, 2555, note), conjectured that Nerva resigned before Vespasian and that Domitian took his place, thus bringing father and son together for a short time, and that the inscription dates during this period. Such resignations of one consul sometimes occurred (cf. p. 117, note 5, and no. 311), and may have taken place this time in order to give some honor to Domitian by making him consul with his father. The same difficulty arises in Pliny, N. H. II, § 57, where the reading is Imperatoribus Vespasianis patre tertium filio II consulibus. Schoene (C. I. L. IV, 2555, note) would delete II, and offer the same explanation as in this case—that of Henzen. It may be, however, that in the Pliny passage Titus is meant. He would have been in his second consulship in 71, if he had held the office that year, and his name may have been given through error or oversight.

² Perhaps Surrentine wine from the Fabian district or estate.

³ Wine grown on Mt. Vesuvius, perhaps that which Pliny (N. H. XIV, § 70) calls Pompeianum. On the two forms of the name, see Galen, X, 123.

⁴ Cf. no. 7.

⁵ Cf. nos. 83 and 244.

⁶ Henzen (Bull. dell' Inst. Arch. Germ. 1862, pp. 217-219) shows that the β' refers to both consuls. He advances three main arguments: (1) If the numerals referred only to Pompeius Silvanus, his name would have come first. The argument is not strong; while this may be the more general order, it would depend in many cases upon the relative prominence of the two men, or the will of the engraver or writer; cf. Cic. De Senect. 5, 14; C. I. L. VI, 2051, l. 46; etc. (2) Tampus Flavianus was legate of Pannonia at the time of the accession of Vespasian, and this legateship was a consular office. (3) Tacitus (H. III, 4) speaks of Tampus Flavianus plainly as consularis.

² Cf. Tac. Ann. XII, 32; perhaps the same as the Cenimagni of Caesar, De Bello Gallico, V, 21.

³ The first line is found also in Eph. Ep. III, 121 b and c.

325. Vesp. Caes. Pansian(a). (C. I. L. V, 8110₂₈.)

This inscription occurs on several tegulae, found at various places on the coast of Venetia and Histria, from the so-called officina Pansiana.¹

326. Iuliae Aug. l. | Thallus. (C. I. L. XV, 1473.)

It is uncertain whether Livia or Julia, the daughter of Titus, is meant.

There is a considerable number of these inscribed bricks and tiles from the city of Rome that, from the form of the letters, are assigned to the time of Vespasian.² There is also a number belonging to the two Domitii.³
